Fashion Gossip.

The constantly-changing and ever-recurring topic of dress, though in some of its aspects a delightfully interesting one, in yet the most troublesome that afflicts the feeble mind. Every lady of social standing finds her soul harnssed by it at least twice a year, and who shall tell of the anxieties undergone by those dames whose worldly status depends entirely upon their clothes? The lady of means, whose position is assured, can afford to dress shabilly if she chooses; can even be "genteel" in a last year's bounet and devoid of a pull-back; but the lady without means, whose standing is shaky—never! The wife of the circk, whose salary scarcely pays rent, food and fuel, and the daughters of the bankrups husiness man, whose income is derived from Heaven's knows where, must keep up appearances by dressing as stylishly, if not as richly, as the wealthiest. For the latter class to forego one button from their gloves or one-trap from their silppers would be ruination, and they must keep well up in the very latest agony of coffs and cravats, bows, back-hair und trinkets, fans, fancy shoe-buckles and still more fanciful stockings, and all other expensive accessories of the toilet. The sewing-woulant, the shop-girl and the waiting-maid are each as particular in their respective spheres, and so on down through every stants of society to the hard-working Bridget, who invests Fashion Gogsty spheres, and so on down through every strata of society to the hard-working Bridget, who invests in a be-milled Sunday silk, so that she may look as well as her companions. There is no country like our American Republic in this respect. We, who have imported so much from abroad—French Cashlons, foreign wines, Italian art, English plays, even marriagra "on the European plan"—would do well to horrow some sound sense from across the ocean in regard to dress. Whatever may be the extravagances of Parisian women, they have always an eys to the "eternal fitness" of things, and are sure to dress appropriately. In La Helle france the titled dains, the monderies and the france the titled dains, the monderies of the plant gown of stout, stiff black silk, which lasts a lifetime, and the servant to her clean print or trin stuff dress, guiltless of gewgaws. In England Lady High-Filer has no fear that her maid will cut patterns for her friends in the lower regions from her mistress Worth or Van Reuth costumes; but Mrs. Shoddy, of New York, while promenading Broadway in a suit which cost half her husband's monthly income, is liable to meet her colored cook, parading a free country," under a republican form of government, which has produced so much of government, which has produced so much of good that we may well overlook its errors, and there is no help for it.

The fashion-writer who would assist the majority must not confine her descriptions to elegant imported costumes of fashulous prices, suited only to the errors of society, who are but as a drop in the national bucket, but must tell us how to follow the futile goddess from afar, and to hotogue in her beams with home material made up by American anodistes. The best advice to the middle classes, whose means are sure but limited, is—don't buy too many cheap dresses, and don't indulgs too extensively in expansiv ties. Make sure of throughout, at least one a year, of fine material, and made by the heat dreatmaker yet know of, as these are by far the cheapest in the end. If you are blessed with a moderate degree of "gumption" you can make over your last year's best, with the addition of a little raw material, into a second-best suit for this year. Gloves, shoes and underclothing must first be well provided for, as necessaries, and then divide your surplus pin-money in superfluities. Beinember that soiled five-button gloves and shabby ten-dollar boots are no longer as fait, and that plenty of three-button kilds and fresh boots of a cheaper variety are preferable.

Amid all the ups and downs of fashion there is nothing so serviceable as an elegant black silk, and no lady in moderate circumstances can afford to be without one. No other dress is such a stand-by or suitable for so many occasions, and no goods can be so utilized as soing as a scrap remains. Black silks are very much reduced in price, so that now a hand-some grade can be bought for $1.75 a yard that not long ago soid for $2.50. The soft, yielding smare sliks seem more suitable for mourning. Heavy assure silks for cloaks and polousises are better the processor of the same purpose for about $3. Antwerp silk, which is still better, being a yard and three-quarters wide, costs from $4.50 a yard, but it requires but two yards and a balf for a long cloak.

If you are disposed to be economical, get six yards of silk and four and a half yards of double boweries or nimo of single width. Six yards of silk will not of course make a whole underskirt, but you can make the foundation of exactly-matching alpeac or cambrie, as most of the ready-made costumer are, and trim with silk at the bottom. The polonalees are so long that no one is ever the wiser. A very handsame suit may be gotten up in this way for less than fifty dollars, allowing twenty for the making. For instance, suppose you have a navy-blue bourette, the knotted thread running through it being dotted with straw color and cardinal. Ten yards of bouttered at 2a yard, and eix yards of plain navy blue American silk to match, for trimming underskirt, sleeves, and collar. The bows which fasten the front and finish the loopings may be made of navy-blue silk, lined with straw color and cardinal.

A much more elegant suit can be made by using velvet for underskirt and sleeves, and expensive fringe and galloon for trimming and they can also be made much cheaper by using laferior material. Most ladden have the color and trilles for underskirts, sleeves, and trimmings, and thus awe the expense of new Seme Day.

"Some day," we say, and turn our eyes Toward the fair hills of Paradise.

Some day, some time, a sweet, new rest Shall blossom, flower like, in each breast. Some time, some day, our eyes shall see The faces kept in memory. Some day their hands shall clasp our kands Just over in the morning lands. Some day our ears shall hear the song Of triumph over sin and wrong. Some day, some time, but oh! not yet; But we will wait and forget That some day all these things shall be, And rest be given to you and me.
